I have discovered that the prof the High Strategos, Maxillar Pythareus, is a traitor to Taldor. He has made deals with Quadrians to attack the nation so that he can defeat them. The debacle of Aintius was entirely his fault. I cannot believe this is the man I have followed. It is treason to conspire with the enemy. His imperial ambitions place all of us in jeopardy. How can a man so dedicated to the lives of his men, so supportive of veterans, be interested at all in courting war? I am not sure whom to trust.

The General is sending me to Cassomir to seek information on the Wheel of Arminius from the Ralthons. I fear that if he gets it, he will extend his activities to the sea. The High Strategos is an excellent general, but I am not sure we need to go to sea. Also, is this a ploy to get me away? Does he suspect something?

I met with Lady Ralthorn yesterday in Cassomir. She is clearly suspicious of my motives. I found her charming and quite adept at court intrigue. The General is not going to be happy with me. I fear I have only alerted her to the danger.

I fear I am discovered! Confiding in Major Evennas was a mistake. I am not sure the Evennas has ever been a real person, and not one of the shape shifting agents of that snake Jeroth. I don't know what will happen next. I am going to hide these journals under the house. If I can get word to Maecia maybe she can get someone to retrieve them. I am including the damning documents I have found. In the right hands, they could save me. I fear I have waited too long.
